APPLETONS' JOURNAL.—VOLUME SECOND.

ACCORDING to announcement made at the close of the first volume of this JOURNAL, the second volume ends with the last number of the year, in order that hereafter, for convenience of both publishers and subscribers, the volumes may date from the first of January and July of each year. Volume Third will begin with Number Forty, under date of January 1, 1870, and thereafter each volume will consist of Twenty-six Numbers, or for the full period of six months.

The Publishers have not only the evidence of success, but the assurance of private correspondence, and the testimonials of the Press, that the plan adopted for the JOURNAL has the approbation of the public. The Publishers will continue to unite popular fiction, attractive illustrations, and papers of travel, adventure, and biography, with discussions on scientific, social, and literary topics, endeavoring at all times not only to entertain the reader, but to supply him with literature of a truly valuable character.

Their plan for the ensuing year includes many novelties, such as will increase the popular character of the JOURNAL—pictorial visits to many famous localities, new fiction from the best writers, biographical sketches of celebrities in art, literature, and science, animated discussions on social topics, and varied and entertaining papers on the many subjects that enlist the sympathies or pique the curiosity of intelligent minds. The Publishers pledge themselves to spare no pains to render APPLETONS' JOURNAL not only valuable and entertaining, but a vivid and fresh reflex of life in all its best aspects, and of opinion in its most advanced form.
